Raptors of the World by James Ferguson

They may hunt from exposed perch, or fly over open areas in order to detect preys, and then, they dive and catch them. The beauty of each species, deep eyes, elegance of the silhouette, and for some of them, impressive size, make these birds the kings of the sky! Raptor species that require forest are more likely to be threatened and declining than those that do not. Owls can be spotted in all of the regions of the world with the only exception being several remote islands and at the polar ice caps.

Raptors of the World: A Field Guide

Wingspan: Up to 80 inches. There is a hierarchy between them, even if some disputes regularly occur.

Ten Largest Raptors in the World

Wide spread in Europe and Asia. South and Southeast Asia have the highest richness and the largest number of threatened raptor species.

The Largest Birds Of Prey In The World: 13 Giant Raptors ✓ ☐

Weight to 20 plus pounds. Their diet mainly consists of carrion along the lines of deer, cattle, sheep, and rabbits, and are tough birds, living around 50 years in the wild and able to go for a couple of weeks without eating. Harriers Harrier is a term that is applied to some hawks which are members of the Circinae subfamily.

RAPTORS OF THE WORLD by Ferguson

New World Vultures are unique since they have an exceptionally well-developed sense of smell.
