Learn Japanese

In fact I've been told that when choosing a baby's name, some people just pick a kanji or two and allocate any old pronunciation to them. So Nippon is perfectly logical; it's the Nihon version that's irregular. Don't give me this 'showing disrespect to Japan'!

Nippon or Nihon? No consensus on Japanese pronunciation of Japan

I'm inclined to think that the phonetic value was more important. I believe this is why earlier pronunciations of the consonants you mentioned at the beginning of words differed from the present, like with the current 'h' sound being once 'p' at the beginning of the word.

Nihonto: Real Japanese Samurai Swords

I'm going but I'll be back. Just for fun I asked him how many centimeters it was.

Nihongo o Narau

Most Japanese tell you that would be impossible since the deeper meanings of kanji disappears but if we take a look at Korea, they manage pretty well with hangul. It's easy to say people spend too much time learning how to read so they should just get rid of kanji. Things are way more complicated than they ever had to be.

Learn Japanese

And again, I mentioned German to her, which is known as Deutchland in Germany, Allemande in France, etc.
