Federal :: Indian Child Welfare Act Proceedings

It is also important to recognize that recovery is a process and some families may not be ready at a particular time; offering the option of discussing their experience in the future is recommended. For example, ICWA would apply to an action where a court was considering a foster-care placement of a child, but ultimately decided to return the child to his parents. It is also essential that institutions promote communication with the woman and her family and community and, for example, have adequate space for family members and enough chairs so that everyone, including the health professional, can be seated at the same level.

BIA social services and law enforcement are often the first responders in matters involving families and children. As discussed further below at Section IV.

Chapter 4: Care during labour and birth

Public hearings and Tribal consultations were held on April 22, 2015, in Portland Oregon; April 23, 2015, in Rapid City, South Dakota; May 5, 2015, in Albuquerque, New Mexico; May 7, 2015, in Prior Lake, Minnesota; May 11 and 12, 2015, by teleconference; and May 14, 2015, in Tulsa, Oklahoma. This rule serves to clarify ICWA's requirements, with the goal of promoting uniform application of the statute across States. That definition is consistent with the definition in Black's Law Dictionary, a standard legal reference resource.
