University of Houston Digital Library: Ship of Fools Woodcuts: Das Narrenschiff

An allegorical painting by , The , a fragment of a triptych said to have been painted by Bosch between 1490 and 1500, may have been influenced by the frontispiece for the book. It still possesses an enormous vigor and vitality. Ohne Gewähr und ohne jegliche Vorwegvermittlung durch eine verbindliche Glaubenslehre oder durch die Institution der Kirche.

Ein jeder wart' in seinem Grab Des Urteils, das er selbst einst gab, Und wer damit das Recht verletzt, Dem ist auch schon die Frist gesetzt, Wo er ein kräftig Urteil find't: Es fällt der Stein ihm auf den Grind! Its call is quiet yet thundering the Universe echo fills my soul The storm is over no more screams Just the desert lonely silence. Místy zcela vynikající poetika plísňící lidská bláznovství druhu všelikého. This is one of many provocative sculptures scattered around the city.

Das Narrenschiff

I've been suddenly awoken by a thunderstorm i don't know where i am i'm a castaway And i hear the madness wave And i hear the madmen's screams I feel like i'm being watched in a strange way an old blind man points at me, saying understandable words And i hear the madness wave And i hear the madmen's screams I see moving shapes at the mercy of the storm a man shouts against the thunders, another one speaks to the wind they try to speak with me but i don't understand them i try to speak with them but they don't understand me Now i know where i am Now i know where i am Now i understand who these people are they are prisoners and free at the same time fools in search of their reasons obscure is their start and their arrival Now i know where i am Now i know where i am Sun rises to light up a new sea now tripping on a sea of trees Green hands to shoulder The Narrenschiff it is scraped and caressed by the waves They rise up to the boat crossing bird flocks track the way Migrate towards consciousness a constant tune reaches the crew. Sicher, alle Menschen fahren dem Tod entgegen. Letztlich hatte der Festausschuss aber aufgrund der verschärften Kontaktregeln davon abgesehen.
