Light Rail Transit Association > Main Section

During long-term works for extension projects, other routes may be operated at weekends, such as Beckton to Lewisham if the Bank branch is closed. Plans were developed, before the system opened, to extend it to in the west and in the east.

List of Docklands Light Railway stations

The two terminal tracks either side of a narrow island platform were replaced by a single track between two platforms, one for arriving passengers and the other for departing. A new has been built 200 metres 660 ft east of the former location as nearby curves precluded lengthening.

These tunnels were intended to be incorporated into the abandoned Phase 2 of the Fleet Line Phase 1 became the original Jubilee line, prior to the Jubilee line Extension. It left the Island Gardens route south of the turn-back sidings, and dropped gently to , where a street-level station replaced the high-level one on the former viaduct. The railway was built for single-car operation, and the upgrade required both strengthening viaducts to take heavier trains and lengthening many pre-extension platforms which were not originally built to take three-car trains.

The works were originally planned as three phases: Bank-Lewisham, Poplar-Stratford, and the Beckton branch. Despite having high floors and being automated, the cars are derived from a German design intended for street running. It is an AHB type and the barriers are down unless a user wants to cross, much like Appleford but AHB styled.
