Feminism and the Gothic: A Brief History

Together with her sister, Cassandra, their mother, and until his sudden death at the beginning of 1805 their father, she lodged in various parts of Bath—in Sydney Place, Green Park Buildings, Gay Street, and Trim Street—making lengthy visits to family and for months at a time removing to seaside resorts, among them Dawlish, Sidmouth, Ramsgate where Wickham trifles with Georgiana Darcy in Pride and Prejudice, and Lyme Regis the setting for some of the pivotal scenes in Persuasion. The proprietors of the newspaper The Morning Chronicle were brought into court.

She soon had other projects in hand, however. It comes at a crucial point, where Frank uncharacteristically blunders by mentioning an item of parochial gossip that he can only know from his secret correspondence with Jane: Mr Perry the apothecary is getting a carriage because he is making so much money from the maladies imaginaries of Highbury. But it will probably take more than two readings for most readers to notice how he has managed to get Miss Bates out of the flat — she bustles over the street to invite Emma in — so that he is alone with Jane and the sleeping and stone deaf old Mrs Bates.
