Interest on the West Coast of Africa by Nathaniel Hawthorne

In other places, they stept from stone to stone, down steep descents, where the riders were obliged to lie backwards flat upon the cruppers. Half an hour afterwards, a very heavy swell assailed us on the larboard, beat in all the loose ports, and deluged the rooms.

Nor was there any particular appearance of a squall. The aid of woman, however, is seldom sought in vain; nor did it fail us now. The profits accruing from thence, however, are very inadequate to the comfortable support of the inhabitants.
