Although State and local government are the primary payors for education, the Federal government has provided leadership in funding compensatory education. Some youth employment programs appear to improve employability and wage rates for the enrollees.

Critical Issues in Child Welfare

Homelessness, along with poverty and hunger, frequently appears as second to drugs as a leading concern of Americans. Nonetheless, it is clearly apparent that the boundaries of problems and solutions described here are profoundly shaped by the income and educational resources and opportunities available to the nation's children and families.
