Raporty organizacyjne: „Chaeil Taehan Kidokkyo Kyōngdo Kyohoe (Kyoto, Japan)”

These pledges appeared in newspapers and were announced on the radio. It needs to be mentioned that, other than the announcement of the publication of this collection in the cited newspaper article, I have not been able to locate this collection of songs from 1962 or any indication of it being used in the public sphere.

Although many at the time regarded Park as pro-Japanese after the normalization, Park in fact believed that removing traces of Japanese colonialism was one of the important strategies of building Korean nationalism during this time, resulting in banning many songs that were considered to be in the style of Japanese popular songs. He maintained the same strategy during his nearly twenty years of presidency, only tightening civilian regulations in reaction to increasing hostility toward his autocratic rule both among the public and within his cabinet.
