Development

Most developing countries do not have the same level of regulation and oversight that the developed world maintains to protect the environment. Because government processes are typically inefficient when compared to the private sector, the presence of multinational companies in each marketplace makes it easier to build profits and improve conditions even if the overall value of each transaction is not high on a global scale.

Assignment 3 Multinational Corporations

This case study of three multinational firms in the export-oriented electronics industry in Singapore shows that under certain conditions multinational firms can lead in creating local vertical linkages. Multinational corporations often take advantage of the international standard of living.
