Handbook of Natural Fibres

The Churnet Valley railway, opened by the North Staffordshire Railway Co. The light railway had been opened to Hulme End in Fawfieldhead, in Alstonefield parish, in 1904, and in the intervening year a steam-powered omnibus was run from Leek to Waterhouses to connect with it. William Sugden came to Leek as architect and surveyor of the Churnet Valley railway line, opened in 1849.

The timber-framed building was rebuilt in the late 1850s to the design of William Sugden, and in 1931 the inn was converted into a 'fancy bazaar' by F. It was then a stone bridge of two small arches, which were inadequate in times of flood.

Natural fibres: An opportunity for job creation and improving livelihoods

During the Second World War many children were evacuated to Leek, mainly from Manchester, Liverpool, London, and Essex. Significant change of temperature can impose large amount of stress in a structure.
