Irish literary renaissance

Shows that the Irish text was translated from French not English as has been suggested , and that a variant version of the French Queste del Saint Graal was a common source for the Lorgaireacht and for Malory. Not noted in Am Bròn Binn, ed. Gaelic text and translation of a short unpublished sixteenth-century text: see also Hartnett pp.

Richard Irvine Best

Substantial resource, with otherwise unavailable translations. Yet there is scarcely one of them in which some Christian allusion to heaven, or hell, or the Deity, or some Biblical subject, does not appear.

Bibliography

II: Part D, Index of Personal Names, Names of Places, and Names of Important Objects in Irish Arthurian Literature, pp. Dublin and Portland, OR: Four Courts Press, 2003, 224 pp. Donegal in the 1970s, and discussion of the text.

Early Irish literature

Bibliography

The date at which these manuscripts were penned is no criterion of the date at which their contents were first written, for many of them contain literature which, from the ancient forms of words and other indications, must have been committed to writing at least as early as the 7th century. London: Irish Texts Society, 5 1904, reprinted 1996. September 2009 Early Irish literature is the oldest in Western Europe.
