New York: Free Press, 1977. The program evaluator: The ESL researcher without portfolio.

Annotations

Kieley and Rea-Dickins argue that Evaluation is about the relationships between different program components, the procedures and epistemologies developed by the people involved in programs, and the processes and outcomes which are used to show the value of a program — accountability — and enhance this value — development p. Citations in the style of Chicago Manual of Style: Aras, Bultent and Omer Caha. Second-stage findings were that instructors and tutors were highly rated; there was a desire for more practice with natural conversation; there were issues with the difficulty level and topics of material; there was poor adaptation to online learning; there was a positive attitude towards improvement actions; some textbook topics were seen as useful but not others; and students had trouble with some online tasks.

Annotations

If you keep one while you research, the annotated bibliography will function as a useful guide. Moderate correlations were found between self-reported L2 use and L2 proficiency. Creating Caring Schools, 60 6 , 40-45.

Annotated Bibliographies // Purdue Writing Lab

This collection, and its many examples, will be of key interest to anyone who is concerned with developing the various components of language programs.

Evaluation Bibliography

His analysis includes an ethnographic study of the evaluation which reveals not just what was learned from the evaluation, but also learning opportunities that were missed. How do I write an annotated bibliography? Read as much of the book or article as is necessary to understand its content. Furthermore, the evaluation successfully served two purposes: accountability and program development.
