Fortunately their names are not forgotten for I have a list of those featured on the roll.

Branch history

We have also an extremely rare building of its type, in a unique location, representing the first and only silk factory in the London area. The Streatham Omnibus and a tram service to Streatham Hill arrived by 1900, and from then on continuous development shaped the area into the townscape of today.

A brief history of Streatham (1990 edition)

Large mansions were built along Streatham Hill from 1833 to 1846.

A brief history of Streatham

It would appear that spurred on by the trauma and loss of life in the First World War and later by increasing conflicts and humanitarian crisis across Europe and further afield. The wage rates of the Spitalfield's silk weaving industry were fixed by the local magistrates following negotiations between the masters and the weavers.

A Brief History of THE STREATHAM HILL

He erected a new factory, in 1820, across the road from his house in Streatham. The main wooded area was Bossheswood, later called Brixton Causeway Coppice, which covered the north of Streatham Hill, while Leigham Wood covered the southern part, almost as far as Woodbourne Avenue. Most of this early house building has now been lost.
