One of the key elements distinguishes urban history from old-style town history urban biographies is its comparative ambition. Zwar sei es während der Tanzimat-Reformen seit 1839 zu zahlreichen Studienreisen von Fachleuten in europäische Metropolen gekommen, aber auch umgekehrt hätten europäische Reisende die Städte im Osmanischen Reich intensiv beobachtet und in ihren Reiseschilderungen beschrieben.

The serious analysis of European cities was also encouraged in the 1980s by other developments: major publications by Jan de Vries, Lynn Hollen Lees and Paul Hohenberg and Paul Bairoch, all of which in different ways sought to provide a framework for understanding the European City Vries, 1984; Hohenberg and Lees, 1995; Bairoch, 1988. Since the 1960s, when urban history emerged as a distinctive sub-discipline, it has attracted endless questions about the autonomy of its realm, both among its followers and its critics, not least over whether the city was a dependent or an independent variable.
