Concerti Grossi (12), Op. 6

The finale, or minuet of this Concerto, has been so much admired by English composers of Handel's school, as to have been frequently thought worthy of imitation. The first movement, in the style of a French overture with dotted rhythms and scale passages, for dramatic effect has the novel feature of being prefaced by a two bar passage for the first concertino violin.

Concerti Grossi (12), Op. 6

The Solo parts of this movement were thought more brilliant, than easy and natural to the bow and finger-board, forty-years ago.

The third movement is a dignified adagio, using similar figures to those in opening bars of the first movement. The third andante allegro is original and experimental, taking a short four-note figure from Handel's opera as a central motif. The following brief adagio, melancholy and expressive, would have been instantly recognized by Handel's audience as starting with a direct quotation from Cleopatra's aria Piangerò la sorte mia from Act III of his popular opera 1724.
