Indeed, such were the leisure interests of many of the Umayyad and ʿAbbāsīd caliphs that the new genre thrived. After the emergence of Persian literature, the most important works on literary theory continued to be written in Arabic, though not seldom the authors were Iranians. This same set of images within the wine poem provides the framework for poetry of an entirely different purpose: that of the Sufi Ṣūfism poets. Narrative plays a role in each of these types, and didacticism is not quite absent from poems that aim first to tell a story. He wrote several poems to bring his dismal condition to the attention of the Ghaznavīd sultan and thereby established a genre of Persian prison poetry.

Beginning in the 1950s, a great deal of committed literature was penned by Arab writers; topics such as the Palestinian people provided a natural focus for such writing, but the goals of the Arab peoples and their individual nation-states—establishing a sense of identity, for instance, and developing balanced relationships with Western countries—involved, more often than not, the active involvement of creative writers and critics within the cultural apparatus of the different regimes. The major break with tradition and, many critics would maintain, the onset of a genuine sense of modernity came in the aftermath of World War II.

There is no agreement as to his genealogy, but the predominant cites Imru' al-Qays as the youngest son of Ḥujr, the last king of.

Ziyād ibn Mu'āwiyā #al

De joden delen in de uitgaven der gelovigen zolang zij in oorlog zijn. Zo maakte hij de eigenlijke hidjra dus niet mee, en de intocht van de profeet in Medina evenmin.

Ziyād ibn Mu‘āwiyā al

The storyteller ḥakawāfī regularly performed extracts from a whole series of popular narrative sagas on the street, often accompanied by musical instruments; his tales related, for example, the chivalry of ‘Antar or the migration of the Banū Hilāl tribe and its hero, Abū Zayd, or the victories of the sultan Baybars against the Crusaders.
