It's a 1,000 days since Northern Ireland last had a government

This was manifested in inter-communal rioting, house burning and expulsion of minorities from rival areas as well as lethal violence including shooting and bombing. The unrest culminated in a series of severe riots across Northern Ireland in August 12-17, 1969 in which 8 people were killed, hundreds of homes destroyed and 1,800 people displaced. The is responsible for overseeing the Northern Ireland devolution settlement.

Stormont: Why does Northern Ireland not have a government?

Irish diplomats have stressed that the fact that the UK and Ireland were both EU members, and often acted in concert in the EU, provided a forum for building and normalising relations that had been strained over the previous 50 years. It is made up of 90 representatives, known as Members of the Legislative Assembly or MLAs, who come from different political parties and a small number of independent MLAs.

Government of Northern Ireland (1921)

Officials have had to manage preparations for Brexit without local political input Intergovernmental working at an official level has generally been good, but there have been concerns that Northern Ireland-specific issues are not being adequately considered in UK preparations.

Why is there no government in Northern Ireland and how did power

No political constituency in early 20th-century Ireland regarded partition as their ideal choice for the future of the island. But there is a danger in expecting too much from these very fragile and divided institutions.

A parting of the ways... The Government of Ireland Act 1920 gave birth to partition, but the division was already well established, and is still being debated today

Every week during Parliament, Secretaries of State from all departments and some other ministers meet to discuss the most important issues for the government. In contrast, the Republic of Ireland is a with its own head of state and government. The government must find ways to repair its relationship with the Irish government, for the sake of Northern Ireland.
