Epic and Sedition: A Case of Ferdowsi's... book by Dick Davis

Davis demonstrates that the public world of kingly authority is shadowed in the poem by a series of tragic father-son relationships, and that in both the royal and familial spheres, authority figures are invariably presented as morally inferior to those whom they govern. He is also the foremost English-speaking scholar of medieval Persian poetry now working in the West. He found its meter and its similes monotonous, and the Epic, itself, of inordinate length. Because he forgets that he has already told this story once? Ferdowsi sermonizes: A horse recognizes its foal, fish in water and wild boar in jungle know their offspring's, But man, because of greed and selfishness, does not distinguish his son from his enemy. Among the qualities that distinguish his poetry and scholarship are exacting technical expertise and wide cultural sympathy—an ability to enter into distant cultural milieus both intellectually and emotionally.
