James Longstreet (U.S. National Park Service)

After the results of Second Manassas and Fredericksburg, Longstreet felt that being on the defensive was the best way to fight the enemy. His corps was allowed to rest and reorganize briefly before they marched toward Fredericksburg, Virginia in response to the next Union threat. Using terrain to his advantage, Longstreet validated his idea that the tactical defense was now vastly superior to the exposed offense.

James Longstreet

In the dispute over the follow-up of the victory, Longstreet was critical of Bragg and was soon detached to Knoxville to drive General Burnside from the city and back into Kentucky. He was the only major general to conduct drills with his division at Centreville. He was well-respected by both Union and Confederate officers and had exceptional service during the Mexican-American War.

Was James Longstreet the “Best Man” at Ulysses and Julia Grant’s Wedding? (U.S. National Park Service)

He was raised and educated there. In September 1863, with the eastern theater looking stable, Lee detached Longstreet a second time, this time to the west. They are tired and need a rest.
