Globalization and Third World Women: Exploitation, Coping and Resistance

Through 10 case studies by different authors, the book documents the gendered process of globalisation by placing the real lives of Third World women, in both the global North and South, at the forefront of this analysis on the negative effects of the process. It unravels the intersections of race, culture, ethnicity, nationality and class which have shaped the position of these women in the global political economy, their cultural and their national history. Farlow is a repeat winner in the annual Picture of the Year International competition.
