How to Become a Herpetologist (with Pictures)

It is important to begin to cultivate contacts through joining any State herpetological society or similar groups. New information on the remarkable advances in behavioral, physiological, and phylo-geographical data provide students with the current research they need to advance their education and better prepare their future in herpetology. Our major goal for this web site is to provide access to collections records and databases, summarize the rich history of herpetological research at Auburn University, describe opportunities for citizens to participate in scientific monitoring of amphibians and reptiles within the state, and present resources for understanding the identification and life history of all amphibian and reptilian species from the state of Alabama.

Join a professional association, such as the Society for the Study of Amphibians and Reptiles, that offers membership benefits to its associates. Herpetology is a specialized field, so your local college may not offer the courses you need. For example, a person might be trained in ecology and do environmental impact studies for the government.
