South Africa

When on the way report arrived from Major Warden that the rebel Boers had left the opposite bank the preceding night, no vestige of them remaining. In humbly advising that the Orange River Sovereignty should be added to the dominions of your Majesty's crown, we think ourselves therefore bound to qualify that recommendation by the further advice that all officers, who represent, or who may hereafter represent, your Majesty in Southern Africa, should be interdicted, in terms as explicit as can be employed and under sanctions as grave as can be devised, from making any addition, whether permanent or provisional, of any territory however small to the existing dominions of your Majesty in the African Continent, and from doing any act, or using any language, conveying, or which could reasonably be construed to convey, any promise or pledge of that nature.

The political issue faced depended on what side of politics you stood on. No trace of a human being.

Orange River Colony (South Africa)

Biddulph, the British magistrate, rode off to Bloemfontein and informed Major Warden, who sent a report to the Governor on the 13th. The turmoil in England made the administration and imperial oversight of the Chesapeake and New England colonies difficult, and the two regions developed divergent cultures.

Dutch Colonization

By the mid-seventeenth century, the Puritans had pushed their way further into the interior of New England, establishing outposts along the Connecticut River Valley. They traded material, flour, tobacco and oxen.

Transvaal Colony

So they again moved in 1843 north to the lands that would become the Orange Free State.

Orange Free State (1843: Doomsday)

Initially, this was only to serve as a trading post en route to Asia, supplying the Dutch East India Company ships with fresh food and water, and a place to stop for rest.

Orange Free State, British Occupation (1843)

The English encouraged emigration far more than the Spanish, French, or Dutch. In consequence of that success, Sir Harry was able to write on the 1st November that he was now able to undertake tasks of a more extensive character, and proposed, after sweeping the Amatolas and driving the enemy from the Fish River Bush, if he concentrated there, to march across the Kei with three columns to invade Kreili, whose country was the great refuge of the beaten Gaikas, after which it might be necessary to send a force over the Orange River against Moshesh. Major Warden's report of the 13th July reached Sir Harry Smith at Cape Town on the 22nd.
