Regional powers and security: A framework for understanding order within regional security complexes

The porous borders in the region facilitate the movement of these persons and weapons of violence. Electricity is an important source of political currency for the government by enabling it to provide a nearly free good to the population, though there has been some effort to raise tariff rates and increase charges to households. A tendency toward the former would imply a proactive regional power, while a tendency toward the latter would imply a reactive one.

The real challenge lies beyond the amount of aid given, and should be concerned with the focus and design of peacebuilding programmes and support. The territory that the Soviet Union amalgamated to form the Republic of Tajikistan was made up of regions with little or no connection to each other either culturally, economically, or even geographically and did not include the main centers of Tajik culture in Central Asia, Samarqand and Bukhara. Finally, across most indicators, Brazil emerges as the clear regional power in South America. In 2018, the National Security Committee of Kazakhstan developed a state programme for countering religious extremism and terrorism in Kazakhstan for 2018—2022.

FMs of India

Regional stability in the MRR is threatened by many unemployed, unskilled youth populations that can be easily instigated to violence. It is not uncommon for these states to be formed by former belligerents, which raises concerns over their neutrality, impartiality, transparency, accountability and capability.

Afghanistan may serve as land

Antiterrorist efforts should address the financing of terrorism in particular. The promotion of national peacebuilding initiatives shows the now widely accepted acknowledgement that the root causes of conflict in general, and in Africa in particular, are context specific.

Afghanistan may serve as land

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission TRC in Sierra Leone identified youth marginalization and political exclusion as one of the root causes of the Sierra Leone conflict. As financing of social services is increasingly being delegated to the local level through unfunded mandates, local officials feel compelled to extract revenue from whatever source they can.
