The Constitution

On joining the EU Sweden was therefore obliged to make a few minor adjustments to the fundamental laws. Together, they constitute a basic framework that stands above other laws and regulation, and also define which agreements are themselves above normal Swedish law, but subordinate to the fundamental laws, namely the European Convention on Human Rights and several UN and EU treaties and conventions.

For example, its fourteen chapters set how out meetings of the Chamber are to be conducted and what rules apply as regards the duties of the Speaker. While the king's power was somewhat reduced compared to the of Gustav III, the new document enabled the king to take a more active role in politics than during the Age of Liberty. It is, however, the Act of Succession that contains the rules on who shall succeed to the throne.

The Constitution

Freedom of the Press Act The most recent Freedom of the Press Act was adopted in 1949 although Sweden established freedom of the press by law as early as 1766 and was first in the world to do so. The Councillor was legally responsible for his advice, and was obliged to note his dissension in case he didn't agree with the King's decision. As a result, the ministers did most of the actual work of governing, making Sweden a de facto parliamentary monarchy.

Instrument of Government (1809)

Both submissions and reports are dealt with in the same way as private members' motions and Government bills. Committee reports are proposals from the parliamentary committees for a decision by the Riksdag. The first constitutional Instrument of Government was enacted in , marking the transition from to.
