The effects of planned change on Estonian morphology

Talainh is given in the genitive in chapter 11, and left unamended. This word is shown in FdS as both masculine and feminine, with the dative either taobh or taoibh, although instances of taoibh in the dative in the original are transcribed in the LS edition compiled by Shán Ó Cuív as if from taobh.

This would be cosnaím, cosaint in the CO. Note that liú is feminine in WM Irish, but masculine in the CO.

Foclóir do Shéadna

The historic dative was ammain, the ending of which appears to be broadened by assimilation to the following broad consonant. The final consonant heard in the pronunciation is left untranscribed, as it was not indicated in the historical orthography and is not indicated in the spelling adopted in the CO. Mairbh cannot be genitive singular here, as use of the concatenated genitive in the unbracketed construction would not require lenition.

Note the preterite here do bheir, where do rug is used elsewhere by PUL. Shán Ó Cuív regularly transcribed mura as mara in his LS edition, indicating that the mara is the more dialectal form.
