The Pageant was a lot of things, but smooth it wasn't. Reading these stories made me wish I lived in a small town where everyone seems friendly and knows one another. The real climax of imprecision came, however, at that point of high drama when Mary and Joseph enter, Mary clutching a baby doll in a blue blanket.

She began by asking me if I thought the decorations on the Christmas tree in the church parlor were appropriate. From Kirkus Reviews: A debut collection of mild-mannered, sermon-like tales covering a year in the life of a Presbyterian minister in a small Minnesota town--by a native of Minneapolis and pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Northport, New York. It is written in the 60's and still has the feel of Andy Griffith but 60' 70's feel.
