In The Best Interest Of The Child, A Manual for Divorcing Parents

So his Mom and her family raised him until he was 18 and have I have raised him ever since. According to California law, each parent, acting alone, can consent to the mental health treatment of his or her minor child ren.

Children Need Both Parents Even after Divorce

No one is saying that is forever, and I don't feel and I don't believe the children feel they can just pick up where they left off after so long.
REPORT OF JOINT PROPOSAL OR STATEMENT OF INTENT; AGREEMENTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.

Consent for the Treatment of Minors with Divorced Parents

The first thing to remember before we start picking over the complexities is that the family court system orders a one-size, gender biased straitjacket for almost every case: sole custody in practice, regardless of what they call it. Legally, equal parenting should apply in almost every case, and should mean 1 whatever arrangement parents freely and jointly agree, or 2 where parents do not agree, an order for equal time, rights, and responsibilities on some practical schedule.

If the custody order indicates that the consent of only one parent is required, the therapist can make then a clinical determination as to whether it is appropriate to begin treatment with the consent of only one parent. Granted, my kids are getting older, wanting independence. Even if many within it are well-meaning, the system is so fundamentally abusive toward parents and children that it must be considered hostile to the public, regardless of how it may try to rationalize and preserve its power.

Courts will sometimes listen to the wishes of older children. The evaluation will likely also include psychological testing of the parents to aide the evaluator in making a recommendation on what is in the best interest of the child. For ordinary people, government can safely help only when parents voluntarily request it, and never lose their rights in the process.
