Transport in the Soviet Union

It was only late in its existence that the Soviet authorities put emphasis on road construction and maintenance because of the vital role road transport usually played in the regional economies of the USSR. Transport Ministry figures indicate that 50 new vessels were built for the Russian river fleet in 2000; this compared with 68 in 1999, 43 in 1998 and 34 in 1997. The activities of the Soviet merchant fleet, Morflot, continue to cause anxiety to the governments, shipowners and shippers of cargo in the West.
