Course Requirements

Our goal during the interview phase was to talk to an elected official, planning commissioner, and staff member from the housing, planning, and economic development departments in each jurisdiction. With a much smaller staff, a reluctance to rebuild too quickly, and efforts to recoup their losses from the recession, subcontractors are taking the opportunity to make up the margins, which increases construction costs.

Literature Survey: The Effect of School Quality on Housing

They need to learn to recognize the trade-offs in development. This recognition of resident fears was reiterated across jurisdictions from a range of respondents. Black set out to calculate how much more people are willing to pay for houses located in areas with better schools.
