South Asian Pamphlets collection, 1920

DSAL makes digital materials for reference and research on South Asia - including reference resources, images, statistics, and selected journals and books - available to the public. Unfortunately you can not see this painting currently at the RAS. Many items of interest have come to the library over the years.

New Finding Aid: The South Asian Pamphlets Collection

They cover reform, trade, social issues, economics, developments in the Indian states, early political mobilization, and policy matters relating to famine, agriculture, irrigation, and culture. Recently we have shown a commitment to contemporary South Asia and greatly increased our purchase from India to supplement UK publications and some South Asian publications that come through legal deposit because of distribution in the UK. In it you will find both rules of membership by election only and rules of fair play.

South Asian Oral History Project Digital Collection

We have correspondence collections from all types of Scots in India: some were rogues and wanderers, attracted by the desire to make money; many travellers wrote of their travels. In terms of special collections relating to South Asia, the National Library of Scotland is very strong on mountaineering and polar exploration. The University and a collaborating trust, MOZHI, have established the Roja Muthiah Research Library in Madras to house this collection.

But if you would like a special close-up encounter with some of our collections then you will be pleased to know that this year, as part of Explore Your Archives Week, we are again running a creative writing workshop.

South Asian Studies Collection

This work was interrupted by World War II, so the present building in the centre of Edinburgh was designed and begun in the 1930s but not opened by Queen Elizabeth II until 1956.

Collections: South Asian and Himalayan

The India Papers Collection One collection of note, and with very strong Kolkata connections, is known as the India Papers Collection, a collection of official documents published in India which is unique in Scotland, and is equalled in the UK only by a similar, but not identical, collection in the British Library. Types of materials collected include pamphlet literature and ephemera, such as sectarian religious literature; popular erotic literature; literature on the cinema; cookbooks; maps; and radical political literature. The rare books collections reflect the presence of Scots in India: many Scots formed part of the administration of the Empire and spent time in South Asia.

About the Southern Asia Collection

The collection also includes books about South Asia written in the European languages. The Archive of the publisher John Murray, who published a number of guidebooks, is held in the National Library of Scotland and contains a wealth of correspondence from Scots travellers in India.

Nineteenth

Particular countries may have unique topical headings. They cover greater Asia, India, Afghanistan, and numerous tribes and religious groups. A curious footnote in this phrasebook makes the point that since the British in India would be doing little more than telling people what to do, then the imperative case was the most necessary one to know, and indeed most of the phrases are commands.
