FERC: Public Utilities Selling at Market

Liberty, whose franchise territory includes western and southern areas of the state, serves approximately 6 percent of the retail customers in New Hampshire. In the restructured market, some of these power plant assets may become stranded; that is, they won't be able to operate competitively in the new market place.

The Commission issued a restructuring plan in February 1997, although its implementation was slowed by subsequent litigation that constrained the Commission to consider only voluntary filings of settlement agreements or compliance plans. Because the conditions imposed on these investors prevent them from exercising day-to-day control over the utilities whose voting securities they acquire, FERC determined that utilities with a common upstream institutional investor are not under common control. The Task Force met twice during 1999 with no customer choice legislation being proposed.

California Electric Energy Crisis

The ISO will control and operate the state's transmission system to schedule delivery of electric power supplies, and ensure all standards for transmission service are met. . That structure may soon change as new technologies allow decentralized and disconnected users.

Some new managerial recruits deliberately had little utility experience, coming instead from competitive industries. Instead of only engineers, more utility decision-makers had training in law, accounting, public relations, and even environmental advocacy.

FERC: Public Utilities Selling at Market

The CTC for investor-owned utilities varies by utility. Recovery of utility costs was already built into the existing regulatory structure and is included in rates charged to all customers. Utility executives wistfully noted that with competition on the horizon, the industry had become less friendly, with managers refraining from talking and socializing with each other as in earlier days.
