FACT CHECK: Did George Orwell Say, 'Telling The Truth Is A Revolutionary Act'?

The topic of the quip was smoking, and the words were ascribed to a well-known comedy superstar: Groucho Marx says he became disturbed over the effects of smoking, after reading an article on the subject, he gave up reading. My guess would be that, if this was not said by him in some obscure work no one here has located, then it was probably someone summing up one of Orwell's writings that then got mistakenly reported as something Orwell said himself.

A revolutionary act

This, I would still argue, is our greatest current priority.

Quote Investigator

This to me does not sound like Orwell, I know not a good reason to remove it but one of the few hits on google has an additional line which mentions millimeters rather out of place and it seems to be adapted from. Those expecting a dry volume of gigahertz and kilowatts coupled with climate data will instead discover how the Australian people have been conned by those they elected to represent their interests and by a platoon of rent-seekers in industry, science and environment groups. Another difficulty in reaching a compromise is that you had chosen, for often-stated reasons, not to involve yourself in the copyright deliberations.

FACT CHECK: Did George Orwell Say, 'Telling The Truth Is A Revolutionary Act'?

Previous researchers located the key 1993 citation and found phrases in the works of Orwell and Kipling that contain parts of the idea expressed in the aphorism under investigation. Dates on websites are sometimes inaccurate because the retroactive alteration of text and dates is easy to accomplish.
