Cadogan quickly assured Welles that the British government had entered into no postwar commitments with the possible exception of an oral statement to the Yugoslav government that the British believed the subject of jurisdiction over Istria might come under consideration at the end of the war. The political and intellectual rationale behind the statement of these principles was not at all well considered.

A critical issue in the origins of the Cold Warthe development of SovietAmerican conflict over Eastern Europe from 1941 to 1945is the subject of Lynn Etheridge Davis's book. The differences glossed over at Yalta came to haunt the Allied governments once again.

COMMUNISM IN EUROPE

At least they were not ready to renounce their desire to see representative governments established. American officials were preoccupied with the need to avoid the mistakes of World War I, and they seized upon these principles as a means to promote postwar peace. These officials argued that it would be most unfortunate if the Soviet invasion and ensuing plebiscites in the Baltic States should be accepted as the mode for ascertaining the wishes of the peoples of liberated countries in the future.

COMMUNISM IN EUROPE

The absence of trust and a common enemy influenced the breakdown ofthe Grand Alliance. . Following the entrance of the United States into the war, the Declaration of the United Nations was signed.

Otherwise, we shall find, as President Wilson did, that there were all kinds of commitments which we shall be invited to respect; and we shall not be able to break the solid front any more than we were at Versailles. The British government kept the State Department informed of Stalin's demands during Eden's visit, but it did not propose any joint British-American reply. .

The Cold War Begins: Soviet

The difficulties which might be involved in achieving their implementation were never considered. The European Division concluded: There is no doubt that the Soviet Government has tremendous ambitions with regard to Europe and that at some time or other the United States and Great Britain will be forced to state that they cannot agree, at least in advance, to all of its demands.
