Bonny Colne On The Hill. Colne, UK

Playboy will be celebrating its 50th Anniversary this December.

The Wallace Hartley Colne

This is not to say that the Rev Mcvivar's conciliatory approach to religious history did not attract some controversy; his clear aim of uniting Christian feeling attracted some scorn from one spectator, who stated that Mcvivar's views about continuity in the essentials of Christianity following the Reformation, delivered in the guise of Archbishop Tillotson, were frankly laughable. The scene ends with a procession and singing of the hymn 'For All the Saints Who From Their Labours Rest'. Text about The Wallace Hartley.

The building's various restorations and several of its past ministers were focussed upon in many scenes. He describes the ancient Kingdom of Northumbria wherein the 'heathen' Edwin rules and 'German gods were mostly worshipped'.

Scene Eight: Visits of John Wesley to Colne 1748 to 1786 In this, an attack on John Wesley by the Curate at Colne is depicted. The scene ends with the bride and groom moving out of sight and all assembled singing 'We Love the Place O God'. The scene ends with a further rendition of Blake's 'Jerusalem'.

Bonnie Colne by Peter Wightman

Bonny Colne On The Hill is located in Colne. Frank Slater bottom left, with his wife, came to Colne the year before Francis Duckworth was born. Choristers—both children and adults—performed, and a host of organisers pitched in at very short notice to make the event a success.

A Pageant of the Church in Colne

By scene twelve, the pageant had brought the story of Colne Parish Church up to the present day; and at this point, local history did become conjoined with national history.
