The Executive Summary of “Career Anchors: Discovering Your Real Values”

The worksheet exercises are comprehensive, and if you do them carefully, could take 4 to 6 hours. John Van Maanen works within the fields of organizational behavior and theory and is an ethnographer of organizations ranging from police departments to educational institutions to a variety of business firms.

Schein's Career Anchors Framework

As with types identified by other theorists, most of us do not fall neatly into a single category but combine two or three. What do I want or not want, either because I have never wanted it or because I have realized after some work experience that I no longer want it? You want your enterprise to be financially successful as proof of your abilities. Do your employees seem stuck in their current career? What If I'm Taking the Survey on My Own? Contract or project work, whether part-time, full-time, or even temporary, is acceptable and often desirable.
