Why Africa needs capitalism that is aligned with its development needs

The company targets consumer market sectors with particular interest in agro-processing, light industrials and manufacturing, fast moving consumer goods, construction materials, retail and distribution, logistics, pharmaceuticals and healthcare and education. Since 2004, economic growth has boomed at an average level of six percent annually, on par with Latin America.

Capitalism: Africa

They have often worked alone but are now becoming more collaborative through their role in funding new development banks and the One Belt, One Road Initiative. These urban areas are also great centers of economic activity, and their citizens naturally seek to stay informed about what is going on around them. African development and the marginalisation of domestic capitalists Working paper 115 The revival of industrial policy discussions has operated in parallel to reports of increasing domestic wealth accumulation across the African continent.
