1975 Conservative Party leadership election

Following his defeat in the September, 1974, special election, Louis Wyman returned to New Hampshire where he served as associate justice on the New Hampshire superior court. He would go on to serve six terms in all—the most of any council member 1971 through 2011—and chose not to run for reelection when his final term was up in 1988.

1975

The 1975 election brought wholesale changes to the makeup of the city council.

Also on the first round the requirement for a victorious candidate to have a lead of 15% over their nearest rival was modified so that this would now be 15% of the total number of MPs, not just those voting for candidates. Louis Wyman promptly appealed to the New Hampshire State Ballot Law Commission, a move Durkin tried to check by legal maneuvers that eventually involved all levels of the New Hampshire courts.
