None of my initial emails were answered so we just drove there initially to have a look around.

Nonfiction Book Review: The Point Is: Making Sense of Birth, Death, and Everything in Between by Lee Eisenberg. Hachette/Twelve, $26 (304p) ISBN 978

He paints an unforgettable portrait of a man reveling in his image as God's chosen football coach, but also traapped by it --- unwilling to confess error or share responsibility. The journal entries, the stories, the Tour de France and world mountain-bike championships, anecdotes that you don't hear riding sport class or category III, are all part of what make Bobke, pronounced boob-ka, such an interesting read. It contains the poignant observatons of people, places, and seamanship that have made Hiscock's previous books so popoular.
