The New Kobbe's Opera Book by The Earl Of Harewood

Much of the additional material first appeared in a supplement or appendix to the main work. The illustrations reflected exactly the singers of Kobbé's time, including Winckelmann and Materna in the first, and many of the famous international artists who sang at the from the 1890s to around 1920. Blue dust-jacket over orange cloth.

The Complete Opera Book

Lord Harewood's strongly individual commentaries, together with his unparalleled knowledge of and enthusiasm for opera, are complemented by substantial contributions from his co-editor Antony Peattie. Various additions were made to it before publication, and also in subsequent editions or reprints, as the subject demands constant revision and renewal, both through new works and through the discovery or revival of lesser known existing ones. Hence in early editions the illustrations are listed in the sequence in which they appear, following the operas, but in later editions the illustrations table is alphabetical by singer.

The Complete Opera Book

The text was now arranged in three main sections. The illustrations were completely replaced with forty new photographs of post-War operatic productions and singers.
