Racial discrimination and bias has been ingrained in the criminal legal and law enforcement system from its earliest days and continues to pervade every level of the system today. About one-third of unarmed people killed by police are Black. Other studies over the decades show disproportionate racial impacts at every stage of the criminal justice process, from police deployment and behavior in Black neighborhoods, to arrest and booking, through prosecution, trial, sentencing, terms and conditions of confinement, and circumstances of parole.

Blacks in the US targeted by an unfair justice system

When an entire system of injustice can operate in the shadows, it can exist with little oversight and little questioning about whether it should exist, whether it serves a prosocial purpose, and whether better alternatives could be implemented.
