Introduction The era of enlightenment in Korea usually refers to the forty-year period from the 1860s to 1910. The trick then was to hire more delivery people and start printing earlier than usual, so that when the issue was banned, it would already be too late to seize them.

All civilized countries, they were told, remember their founders. In short, the symbols and structures of our everyday life reproduce an atmosphere and a sensibility which communicate hostility towards those perceived as the racial other and, by extension, functions to reproduce notions of the superiority of Whites and whiteness.

The Candlelight protesters consisted of various groups: college students, junior high and high school students, labor union workers and farmers, fathers and daughters, babies and mothers, nuns and monks, and artists and performers. In particular, the idea of Tonghak, which was created to counter the influence of Western religions, was widely propagated among suffering peasants and by early 1890.

Korea Between Empires, 1895

During the World Cup tournament in 2002, hundreds of thousands of Koreans, old and young, men and women, spilled into the street, wearing red and creatively wearing or displaying the national flag and the Taegeuk symbol. This era also saw the sudden increase in the use of the Korean vernacular script han'gŭl, promoted by Sŏ Chaep'il, Chu Sigyŏng, and Sin Ch'aeho, although as Schmid points out the Hwangsŏng sinmun, while extolling the virtues of han'gŭl, continued to use the mixed Chinese-Korean script pioneered by Yu Kilchun in Sŏyu kyŏnmun. Whenever the national anthems were played, the Red Devils spread giant flags, overwhelming the opposing team even before the game began.

Caricaturing “traitors”: Communal reactions to indigenous collaboration in Japanese

In addition, like the 1907 National Debt Compensation Movement to gain economic independence from Japan, Koreans participated zealously in the pan-national movement for the revival of the national economy. Their greatest interests were in the areas of modern scientific technology, the munitions industry and industrial organization. Inmurihwaro ponun Choson sidae uri ot, 1998, p.
