My teaching methods in business administration : Chuo Online : YOMIURI ONLINE

Shōwa 15-nendo senbetsu shūshi saisan chōsahyō 1942 -- 99. I have handed out copies of newspapers and introduced the recent difficulties of finding employment faced by new graduates, and the activities of Chuo graduates as overseas cooperation volunteers, and have also had a graduate, who at the young age of 40 is company president of a subsidiary company, come in and give a lecture. In short, to understand diverging employment patterns, sector differences need to be carefully investigated and considered.

Another common trend observed in ranking and promotion systems is that most of the auto firms now take into consideration the element of job, or role, when making promotions to management levels even if the primary evaluation criterion remains, at least for regular staff, ability. These individuals generously donate countless hours to Keizai activities. However, the analysis is based on quantitative techniques and microeconomic concepts such as marginal cost.

Employment practices in Japan's automobile industry: the implication for divergence of employment systems under globalization

In these ways this study contributes to the debate on the effects of globalization on divergence and convergence of employment systems. It is this type of group that adds diversity to Silicon Valley, a different perspective that adds to its innovation ecosystem.
