Notable companies Leicester has been home to a wide variety of companies over the years, some of the most notable are listed here.

Leicester Manufacturing Companies

The former Imperial Typewriters building on East Park Road is a good example of an industrial building that is still used for making things.

Leicester Manufacturing Companies

In 1885 shoemakers working in homes were not thought to earn an average of more than 23 s.

Manufacturing & Industrial Jobs in Leicester, Leicestershire

Is my CV and profile completely private? The board's activities were thought to minimize disputes and strikes, but were not altogether effective. Most of the younger children in the trade were employed in small jobs of neatening and finishing, such as tying off the ends of thread left by the machinists, while older girls sometimes worked as fitters. Hilton, on the other hand, served his apprenticeship in leather-dressing and in 1869 commenced business in that line.

The average day would be punctuated by factory hooters and sirens announcing the start and end of shifts; chimneys belched out soot and dirt that would pollute the air; huge industrial buildings overshadowed the smaller terraced houses. The unit of production was in most cases presumably the family, with perhaps an apprentice or two.
