Velma Swanson Howard (Howard, Velma Swanson, 1868)

Adapted from a semi-autobiographical work that tackles impending doom, death and resurrection, this drama, originally set in a Swedish coastal town in 1901, has been repackaged into 1958 Harlem starring an all-Black cast. Moreover, there is not enough of a distinction between Acts One and Two to define the coming doom and actual death. Mrs Heyst and her son Elis live from day to day on the edge of collapse.

The Ghost Sonata

Morgan in what should be a private moment, but it happens within her earshot because there is nowhere onstage for her to go. The dialogue is so concentrated that it seems as if not one line could be cut without the whole structure falling to pieces, and in these terse speeches a genius is revealed that, with something of the divine touch, sounds the depths of the human heart and reveals its inmost thoughts.
