Telecommunications (Interception and Access) Amendment (Data Retention) Act 2015

Packed with sources of treaties, journals, current awareness tools, and specific internet law topics, it's always good to get a different perspective and expand your research. Despite some discussion about legislative reform in this area, there is however no right to be forgotten — in a similar form to the right under European law — under Australian law.

A competitive telecommunications regime for Australia

The principles at stake One of the most basic of all constitutional principles is that law is made by parliament.
