What Type of Work Did Women Do in 1950?

Eventually and gradually WAAC officers took over the training of the rest of the corps.

Women and Children during the Industrial Revolution

Stilwell had successfully blocked the employment of WACs in his theater prior to this time. And, of course, since each wash required the carting and heating of many buckets of water, higher standards of cleanliness were easily discouraged.

Underpaid, But Employed: How the Great Depression Affected Working Women

WACs handled highly classified material, worked long hours with few days off, and were exposed to a significant amount of danger.

Women in the Factory

Evidence of the accumulated strengths Black women have forged through work, work and more work can be discovered in the contributions of the many outstanding female leaders who have emerged within the Black community. As paid housekeepers, they have been called upon to be surrogate wives and mothers in millions of white homes. Several authors have explored the ethical implications of the sexual division of labor in which it is primarily women who do caring labor.

Charlene White on Loose Women, prejudice and the poppy row: 'It still upsets me'

WAAC recruiting topped that goal by November, at which point Secretary of War Henry L. Retrieved from One of the work environments that women were needed the most was in the factories.
