The cognitive, volitional, and emotional aspects of speech. Threefold classification suggested: what types of concepts are expressed? Its main purpose is to show what I conceive language to be, what is its variability in place and time, and what are its relations to other fundamental human interests-the problem of thought, the nature of the historical process, race, culture, art. This book may have been very good for what it is, but I had a lot of trouble getting through even the first chapter and ultimately didn't finish it.

More significant is the still further abbreviated form in which the sounds of speech are not articulated at all. Its main purpose is to show what I conceive language to be, what is its variability in place and time, and what are its relations to other fundamental human interests-the problem of thought, the nature of the historical process, race, culture, art. In other words, the interjections and sound-imitative words of normal speech are related to their natural prototypes as is art, a purely social or cultural thing, to nature.

This value depends chiefly on the unconscious and unratinalized nature of linguistic structure.
