During the clinical internship and in propaedeutic seminary courses, students are typically schooled in the view that psychopathology is only indirectly a religious concern. Note how often we speak of restoring the individual to his former self, when not restoration but reformation is what is needed.

The religious revival we are said to have had in recent years has been, so far as I can see, less a revival of faith in God and of the hope of glory than a revival of desire for faith and of a hope for hope. John the Divine, in New York: 14 The Crisis in Psychiatry and Religion The Biblical writers are, by and large, short on concepts, long on concern as to the human situation.
