According to Sokal, if the principal components were calculated directly from the original data without maps and the map of principal components were constructed based on these values, we would avoid the false-correlation error. Figure 7 shows the variance that is described by the first ten components. This trend exhibits the strongest correlations with the surnames Vasil'ev, Mikhailov, Fedorov, Aleksan-drov, Andreev, and Il'in.

However, there is another method of studying surnames. If, notwithstanding the sampling errors, the areas of surnames were not to be mosaic, this would directly indicate that Russian surnames are suitable for analysis of the gene pool.
